3. GENERAL OBSERVATIONS

The general situation seems to be calm since the second week of March 2007 when the mission started, and meanwhile we were welcomed by IDPs who spread out around the Dili airport in very poor conditions. Three observers arrived in-country to assist KOMEG and the Women's Caucus for local training (Training of Trainers and Training for observers) for domestic observers' capacity building. ANFREL's East Timor experience in 2007 was very different from the experiences in 1999, when the team came to observe the Popular Consultation Vote, and in the 2001 Constituent Assembly election. The general atmosphere, politics, and the key players had changed from pro-independence versus autonomous to old military generation versus new generation, and political parties versus other political parties.

A tiny beautiful country with a population of about 924,000 with 60 percent women, the majority of people living in very poor conditions, East Timor still seems to need a lot of help from other countries. At the beginning of the year following the unrest in the country, many people were looking for food, especially rice. They needed to buy rice at much more expensive prices than before and finally no rice was sold in the market. That was similar with what happened in Cambodia after UNTAC came to work on the ground, when the Khmer began to use dollars for everything, which raised prices and tax was also very high. East Timor has experienced violence from a large number of conflicts i.e. war of independence, civil war, conflict between military and police, Church, conflict for food, and now political parties' conflict. Conflict has taken place almost every year since the island became independent from Indonesia in 1999.

The ANFREL team worked to do training in a relatively short time compared to when we have worked in other countries in the region. This is because the team members were warned by the United Nations Police (UN-Pol) and the NGOs not to walk outside the hotel after 6.00 or 7.00pm. Activists could not meet or interview voters and electoral stakeholders in the evening. The campaign for the first week was a not as exciting as we expected but on the last day of the campaign (4th April before Easter) all 8 candidates and supporters put all their efforts into attracting voters. Some candidates expressed support for the group of Major Alfredo Reinado (ousted former Military Police Commander).

Members of civil society here seem to know each other and receive good support from the Churches, since East Timor is a Catholic society. Training for Trainers was conducted with the collaboration of the priests and nuns. Most people seem to be part of either one or two political wings. The actors in the political parties also seem know each other well, since some of them were in struggle together during the war or formed and ran the same party in the past.

ANFREL observers interact with people in general. A good sign was hearing that people know about the Presidential election and the candidates they have in mind, but some of them did not remember the number of candidates. Lucio Maria Brandao Freitas Lobato was the only female candidate among the 8 candidates. She seems to be popular in the city and her home town in Liquica district. She was a former Member of Parliament and lawyer.

ANFREL divided the country into three regions - Central, East, and West - and sent observers to each region. While we trained observers of KOMEG, we simultaneously conducted field monitoring as our way of observing the electoral atmospheres in city, rural and border areas throughout the country. ANFREL engaged closer with the main concerns of the people of East Timor by doing interviews of key actors in the election and politics, such as: STAE, CNE, the candidates, security authorities like UN Police, military commanders and BPU (Border Police Unit), civil society like NGO’s, University, IDP, priests and nuns. During the observation ANFREL was delighted to be in the middle of 78 soldier petitioners in Coalman districts, CPDRDTL and Colimau radical communities on the border of Bobonaro-Suai, and collected much information about what exactly they wanted the government to do. It was valuable moment for us to share our field findings with H.E. President of RDTL, Mr. Xanana Gusmao, and furthermore we also shared our concerns for the future of democratization in East Timor. ANFREL completed the mission by conducting a joint press conference with KOMEG to share our findings with the media and the people of Timor Leste.
Conflicts in the country

Unrest in the country seems will never to have ceased since the annexation by the Indonesian military in 1976. After the first declaration of East Timor’s independence by FRELIN, its armed wing Falintil and their supporters, a period of guerrilla warfare began against the ABRI\(^1\) (Indonesian Army) and the pro-Indonesian militias, which were trained and armed to suppress pro-independence parties.

The unrest kept continuing even during and after the days of popular consultation in August-September 1999, when UNAMET announced the victory of the pro-independence vote in the country’s referendum. Thousands of people were killed and vital public facilities were destroyed, and there was increased friction among east Timorese at this time.

In 2006 unrest grew out of internal conflict in the military. It began with 591 soldiers who originally come from the western part of East Timor\(^2\) who signed a petition to demand equal treatment without discrimination between soldiers from East or West\(^3\). The list of demands related to discrimination in ranks promotions, processes for recruitment of new soldiers, implementation of military discipline,\(^4\) i.e. if a woman soldier from the West got pregnant after they joined the army, they would certainly be fired, but not so women soldiers from the East\(^5\). Since then people called these soldiers the petitioning troops. The petitioning soldiers, led by Second Lieutenant Gastaun Salsina and First Lieutenant Florindo Dos Reis, presented the petitions to Army commander Brigadier General Taur Matan Ruak in FFDTL headquarters and to the President of RDTL Mr. Xanana Gusmao as the supreme military commander as well.

The petition did not result in any clear action by either Government and the HQ of FFDTL, which made the petitioners unsatisfied. Meanwhile other troops from the East who opposed their movement subjected them to threats and psychological torture in their camps\(^6\). Finally on March 1\(^{st}\) 2006 Brigadier General Taur Matan Ruak offered as a solution the option of dismissing the petitioners permanently from military service permanently. This was approved by Mr. Mari Alkatiri (Prime Minister of RDTL) on March 20 2006, while the President was not present in the country. It triggered intense conflict between three parties (Government, FFDTL HQ commanders and the petitioning troops). The conflict escalated when Xanana Gusmao claimed the dismissal process was illegal and against the Constitution soon after he came back from abroad on March 22. As President of Timor Leste this petition is his problem, and he considered dismissing one-third\(^7\) of the military forces in the country was a serious move which would be dangerously politically destabilising.

The petitioners’ response was to conduct a big protest in Government House, the office of the Prime Minister, which was supported by many civilians and NGO’s unofficially. The peace protest/demonstration was held on March 24-28, 2006 and lasted until the situation changed to chaos when a group of military from started shooting and attacked the participants with machine guns and grenades fired from grenade launchers in an effort to evict them. Many civilians were killed, and tens injured. The petitioners fled in many directions to save themselves without any command. Some ran to the jungle and the mountains to hide from the militia who hunted them with illegal weapons. Weapons spread out among the public, official said this was to help control the situation in the city.

Following the incidents, Military Police (MP) commander Major Alfredo Reinado, as part of the unit who had authority to punish the military disorder, expressed great anger for the illegal military action taken that day. He launched a protest against the commanders who had given the command to attack the petitioners during the protest rally. Finally because of his disappointment with the military system he decided to join the petitioners and opened a new chapter of conflict in the country.

The conflict continued when President Xanana Gusmao issued an order to capture Major Alfredo, which resulted in increased resistance from his supporters who called for demolition of the government and public facilities. The conflict spread to the grassroots in no time and crystallized as an ethnic issue between the East Timorese in West and East (Lorosae versus Loromono). Hatred and attacks have developed between them, and moreover the civilian harmony has been broken and is worsening because of conflict among gangsters. The city was under a crackdown until President of RDTL called in international troops to handle security and declared a emergency laws to control the situation.

4. PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION 2007

Electoral System
The 2nd Presidential election in East Timor used a single nation constituency, where the voters were free to vote anywhere, and the President was elected from a uninominal list by the voters in a single poll. Any candidates who got majority support, being more than 50% (percent) of the total valid votes would be directly elected as the winner. If no candidate got the amount required, a 2nd round of the election would be held within 30 days after the first election between the two candidates who received the most votes.

The Election Date was determined to be April 09, 2007 by the President of RDTL by decree. In accordance with the constitution, within 8 days after the announcement, STAE published the electoral calendar for the entire election process. From that time, the election phases had began

In the Presidential election in East Timor the candidates were able to be nominated by a single or coalition of political parties or as independents. The nomination of an independent candidate must be accompanied by a minimum of 5,000 and a maximum of 7,500 signatures of voting citizens from all districts. But no district may be represented by less than 100 signatures and each voting citizen may only support one single candidate.

In this election the current President of RDTL, Mr Xanana Gusmao, decided not to participate in the candidacy process to extend his term. He will instead concentrate on forming the CNRT party with plans to register and seek the Prime Minister's position in the parliamentary elections.

Election Administration Bodies
Timor Leste has an interesting structure of electoral administration. Timor Leste has an election commission (CNE) and a body that deals with technical matters (STAE). STAE seems to have two bosses, one is the CNE which plays a supervisory role and keeps an eye on the work of STAE, and

8 In Accordance with the regulation of Presidential Election
9 A complete Presidential Election calendar in Appendix-8
the other is the Ministry of State Administration\textsuperscript{10} which allocates the money for the administration budget. So, STAE’s work necessarily relies on the financial decisions of the said ministry and politician (Minister). This is an unusual structure for an independent body. Mr. Thomas Cabral, a director of STAE, has experience in election observation in other countries including the ANFREL mission in Thailand for the Parliamentary election in 2004.

The CNE does not have the range of power as it does in some countries, but there is a check and balance mechanism among the Commissioners. Their role is to investigate and collect cases of complaints to send to the Appeal Court (Timor Leste does not have a Supreme Court yet). While this procedure might be a good way to prevent the misuse of power by the Commissioners, but it can cause the Commissioners to be less respected or revered by politicians when compared to the power that the courts have.

Technical Secretariat for the Administration of Elections (STAE)\textsuperscript{11}

The organization of elections is the responsibility of the Secretariado Técnico de Administração Eleitoral (STAE: Technical Secretariat for Electoral Administration). The competencies and functions of STAE define it as an executive body of electoral administration under the dependency of the Ministério de Administração Estatal (Ministry of state Administration). STAE provides all necessary technical matters related to the election’s operation including voter education and logistic and administrative matters. STAE is supervised by CNE.

STAE is led by a director who is appointed by the Ministry of State Administration. The director heads a departmental structure responsible for all election phases. In Presidential Election 2007, STAE received support from UNDP, UNV election support, and some international donors, for almost all sectors of the election preparation.

To conduct its duties STAE had a network in districts. All the personnel from district level, polling centers and polling stations had been recruited periodically according to the needs and terms of STAE, after following the procedures of personnel applications, tests and interviews.

Comissão Nacional de Eleições (National Election Commission or CNE)

The National Electoral Commission was established by a law under the constitution of RDTL 2002, art.65 no.6 and the law No. 5/2006. CNE is a permanent body with an essentially monitoring function and is stronger in both composition and competencies when compared to its predecessor which, under the same designation, supervised the elections for Suco chief and Suco council\textsuperscript{12}. The CNE also processes its own budget and has a secretariat, resulting in the strengthening of its autonomy and independence.

CNE members serve for a 6 year term of duty and can be re-elected again for a further two terms of duty. The CNE members shall enforce the value of independence and not support any bodies of the central or local political party in power. The CNE is composed of fifteen members, as follows:

a. Three members appointed by the President of RDTL
b. Three members elected by the national parliament.
c. Three members appointed by the government
d. One judicial magistrate elected by his/her peers
e. One public prosecutor magistrate elected by his/her peers
f. One public defender elected by his/her peers
g. One member nominated by the catholic church
h. One member nominated by the remaining religious faiths
i. One representative from womens’ organizations

\textsuperscript{10} Legal appeals against any decisions made by CNE or STAE are heard by the Tribunal de Recurso (Court of Appeal), which also validates the final results.

\textsuperscript{11} The organization of the elections is the responsibility of the Secretariado Técnico de Administração Eleitoral (STAE: Technical Secretariat for Electoral Administration), which is part of the Ministério de Administração Estatal (UNDP document).

\textsuperscript{12} Suco = Village
To encourage women to participation, at least one nominated member from the bodies referred to in points a – c should be a woman. Presently five women fill positions in CNE.

As an electoral administration body CNE has a number of duties, including those noted below.

a. To supervise the electoral process.
b. To ensure the enforcement of constitutional and legal provisions relating to the electoral process.
c. To approve the enforcing regulations outlined in present law and other electoral laws, as well as the codes of conduct for candidates, observers, monitors and media professionals.
d. To promote, through the media, citizens' awareness of the electoral act.
e. To ensure the equality of treatment for citizens in all acts of voter registration and electoral operations.
f. To ensure equality of opportunities and freedom of promotional material for the candidacies during the electoral campaign.
g. To examine and certify party coalitions for the election.
h. To notify the office of the public prosecution about any acts it is aware of that may amount to electoral offense.

To implement the mandate and duties, CNE has built a network in districts which have four permanent commissioners called "Focal Points" with the function of all mandates in the district. The CNE in districts received support of international advisors from UNV (United Nation Volunteers) and are working very closely with them.

Candidates Registration

The eight candidates who nominated to contest the election to replace President Xanana Gusmao had all passed the Appeal Court registration test. There is a list of eight candidates including Gusmao's sole opponent at the last election in 2002, Francisco Xavier do Amaral, a founder of the dominant Fretilin Party. Also among the candidates is Prime Minister Jose Ramos-Horta, a close Gusmao ally who in 1996 shared a Nobel Peace Prize for nonviolent resistance to Indonesian rule.

The Supreme Court of RDTL confirmed on Saturday (10 March) the list of nominated candidates for Presidential Election after they passed the required legal test. However, the court would have to wait until Tuesday (13 March) for any appeal by members of the public who may disagree with any of the candidates.

With around 500,000 eligible voters set to cast their votes on 9 April 2007 the situation in Dili city has been intense and chaotic, if not colorful. The eight candidates who will start the election campaigns are listed below.

Francisco Lu-Olo Guterres, Francisco "Lu Olo" Guterres, was a commander in East Timor's guerrilla army and spent 24 years fighting Indonesian rule. He was the longest serving member of FRETIILIN and fought Indonesian forces from his stronghold in the Baucau region. He was nominated as the President of FRETIILIN soon after the independence as well as being nominated President of the National Parliament in 2001. A guerrilla turned politician, he found himself in a rather awkward road of recovery serving the people and dealing with former enemies as part of the reconciliation process.

Avelino Coelho da Silva, another leftist leader from the Timorese Socialist Party who is famously regarded as the Karl Marx of Timor Leste for his beard. A splinter from FRETIILIN, he co-founded the party in the early 90's together with several university students and labor groups based in Indonesian cities. Favored among youth and young FALINTIL guerrila, the party was developed based on Marxist-Leninist principles of philosophy and organization, through peaceful educational means for a better socialist state, classless society and capitalist exploitation.13

Francisco Xavier do Amaral (born in 1937) A founder and the 1st leader of the Frente Revolucionaria de Timor Leste Independente (Fretilin) he was sworn in as President when the country, then a Portuguese colony, made a unilateral declaration of independence on November 28, 1975. This was just before Indonesia invaded the country. He has been a member of the National Parliament of East Timor since 2001 and in the Presidential Election in April 2002; he ran against Xanana Gusmao for President but was convincingly defeated. He is currently an ASDT party leader.

Manuel Tilman from the Association of Timorese Heroes (KOTA) is another conservative candidate who favored the 'monarchist' system which advocates the restoration of the power of traditional chiefs in Timor Leste. Coming from Mambai ethnic groups, he is a strong supporter of rebel leader, Major Alfredo Reinado. Together with Fernando Lasama who is also a founding member of KOTA and a supporter of Xanana Gusmao's policy of 'better connection' with Australia. He is one of the largest producers of coffee plantations in Timor Leste.

Lucia Lobato (born in 1965) is the only female candidate in the election. Lucia has been a member of parliament from PSD (Social Democrat Party). She is a lawyer who is very active in advocacy for women's issues in the country.

José Manuel Ramos Horta, (born in 1949) is the 2nd Prime Minister of East Timor and co-recipient of the 1996 Nobel Peace Prize. He is also the founder and former member of the Revolutionary Front for an Independent East Timor (FRETILIN). Ramos Horta served as the exiled spokesman for the East Timorese resistance during the years of the Indonesian occupation of East Timor (1975 to 1999). While he has continued to work with FRETILIN, Ramos Horta resigned from the party in 1988, and has since remained an independent politician. He served as Minister of Foreign Affair and then replaced the Prime Minister Mari Alkatiri after protesters demanded his resignation.

Joao Viegas Carrascalao, a founder of the Timor Leste conservative party – Democratic Timorese Party (UDT), he is Ramos Horta's brother-in-law. At the beginning of Indonesian occupation, UDT and KOTA were the only political parties that favored integration with Indonesia. He later sought refuge in Australia and served as CNRT (National Council for Timorese Resistance) spokesperson. CNRT was founded by Xanana Gusmao's in the mid-1980s after he had a disagreement with FRETILIN leaders both in the country and abroad.

Fernando “LASAMA” de Araujo (born in 1962) from the Democratic Party (PD). A founder of student resistance movements against Indonesian military, he is also the Amnesty International prisoner of conscience for his role in mobilizing people for non-violence demonstration against the Santa Cruz massacre in 1992. He is part of the second largest party in the Parliament with 7 seats and he served as a vice minister of the Foreign Affairs department. He is said to be interested in forming a coalition party to turn the majority FRETILIN party for the upcoming Parliamentary election.

Voter Registration Process
Voter registration in East Timor is compulsory, non official and universal. STAE handles this process. Basically most of the East Timorese were registered from the earlier Suco elections. The present registration process established by STAE sought to:

• update the statistics to include the eligible first-time voters who turned 17 this year and needed to register to get the electoral card;
• cater for any voters who had lost their previous card; and
• allow voters who still held a previous/old card to vote as long they presented the card at the polling station.

The UN identity card could not be used for this election.

People seemed to want the new card, even if they still held the old one since they knew the new card looked more modern. The new card is printed and laminated in hard plastic material and has a photo attached. Peoples wanted to have it, some claiming that their old card was lost and damaged. In Baucau district more than 120 people came to the police station everyday to notify the police that they had lost their old card and needed some document from the police to show to the STAE to enable them to get a new card. Once declared lost a person may hold both previous and new cards. Even though holding two electoral cards is illegal and people who do this may be punished and receive a fine people like to have two cards[17] and so far no-one has been punished for it.

In the registration process, STAE formed and deployed teams to districts to approach people who wanted to register. The teams were working together with STAE at a District level. They pro-actively visited and consulted with the heads of Sub districts and even the heads of the village to make sure every eligible voter registered. However ANFREL and KOMEG Observers still found that many people had not registered. In Baucau, ANFREL noted many complaints of the lack of communication between STAE at a district level and the village chief in Leuro. The STAE was not properly informing him about the voter registration process in that community. So when the STAE came, nobody knew about it and nobody came for such registration and the STAE had to come back a second time. Also the people in the village had to go to the STAE office in the city which was a very difficult journey for them and made them waste a lot of time.

Out of concern for special communities like prisoners, ANFREL visited the state prison in Baucau and we learnt from the chief of the Prison that 39 (one of them female) prisoners were registered. STAE in the districts sent the officer to undertake the process in the prisons on March 13, 2007. Unfortunately, there was no clear information about the technical matters of prisoner voting on Election Day - they still waiting for further instruction from STAE.

There were also reports of uncompleted processes from the District Bobonaro. ANFREL was informed by the CNE about some communities who have large numbers in remote areas with strong leader commands in Dili. Problems arose here through misinterpreting instructions that were given by their leader and have remaining concerns about the registration process. The CPDRDTL (Conselho Popular pela Defesa de Republica Democratica de Timor Leste) communities misunderstood orders from their leader, for example the order was “the organization member can use the organization ID-Card to register and get the voter card”; whereas the community understood that “they can use the organization ID-card when they come to the polling station on Election Day”. By the time the issues were clarified by the relevant parties, the registration period had ended and the people couldn’t register and automatically lost the right to vote. In the meantime they didn’t have an old card either, since they refused to be involved in the election process due their ideology or not having a passport. A complaint was sent to CNE and after arguing the CNE finally managed to successfully explain and calm the complainant down. In the meantime the members of the organization were feeling like they had nothing to lose whether they were allowed to vote or not. They said “we don’t want to support a corrupt and nepotistic government anyway.” They believe that whoever wins the election will not be as effective as the current colonialism of the UN.

The CPDRDTL mentioned above is a mass organization which was established on November 28, 2000 and formed by Mr. Antonio Ai Tahan Matak, and received support from Mr. Rogerio Tiago Lubato18. The organization is a non political organization with mass recruitments and spread over 13 districts. They claim to have approximately 9,000–10,000 members in the years 2002-2004 and continue to increase today. They have refuse to register since the first election because they demand pure sovereignty in the country19 and national independence without ‘interference’ from foreign and UN administration; they think there are many inconsistencies in the positions of government officers including the President and Prime Minister who lead the country but still negotiate and endorse the involvement of the foreign governments including foreign troops. CPDRDTL also strongly criticises corruption and nepotistic practices in the country.

Presently members still hold the CPDRDTL id-card which as a community they believe indicates their struggle against the new colonialism. We interviewed a leader in the village of Bobonaro which has approx. 57 household members. They refused to have an electoral card because they believe the card belongs to the UN. They also consider there are inconsistencies in national practices including a national anthem which is different from the original one when they were still struggling in the jungle on the first proclamation of RDTL in 1975. CPDRDTL members also question why the National symbol which is printed in the present electoral card is not updated to the one which was approved by the National Parliament on November 1, 200620. A BRIGADA of Bobonaro and head of the Sub district confirmed that they will follow the rules of the polling process and will not allow the CPDRDTL to enter the polling station if they don’t have the official ID-Card.

Voter Education

STAE, supported by UNDP, printed several kinds of educational voter materials prior to the election. During the campaign from 23rd March–6th April, 2007, observers noticed campaign posters from the candidates and the UNDP posters. From interviews with voters in the villages and students at the university, we were told that STAE had given voter education directly to university students and the heads of the villages. The heads of the villages also already informed people two weeks before the Polling Day. Observers do not interact much with the heads of the villages of this country since they are not nominated to work at the polling stations or be the chiefs of TPS. This is to maintain the neutrality of the heads of the villages.

The national STAE and UNDP also provided a budget for voter education conducted by local NGO’s which had already identified and registered with STAE. Various NGO’s spread out to districts and assisted with voter education to their respective grass roots. We also met some of them in the field during observation.

The STAE and UNDP have a good strategy and planning for public outreach and voter education through posters, leaflets, banners, and media press access. However we feel this is not enough and not aimed at the right target. More than 65% of the population are illiterate, have no media access and live as farmers or fisherman. In the future it will be important to increase the quantity and duration of face to face training. For example when we observing the evening voter education session for some communities conducted by STAE in Dili we noted the sessions were very brief, didn’t clearly explain everything, and not all the material was covered.

ANFREL observers also interviewed 4 first-time voters who were 17 years old. They all said that nobody had come to give them voter education. Some of them did not have an electoral card because they had not yet registered as they did not have information about the registration process and nobody told them to register. They just hoped that for the upcoming parliamentary election they will be able to register and follow the voting process. As it will be the first time they vote they do not know how to vote because no-one has given them voter education. They just think they will ask about the process when they are at the polling station.
Logistics

A complex logistic operation was planned from the beginning of the election process, following the UN standard operation. The administration of the election was conducted locally, supported by the UN's provision of funds and logistic requirements, with STAE controlling the purchase process for material imported from abroad. Logistically, the project was divided into sensitive and non-sensitive material and all items had to be packed into boxes during the transfer process, except the voting screens. In total 72 items were ready before 7 April 2007. According to the logistic list that ANFREL received from the STAE logistic officer, all the listed items were provided in a proper manner to support the election process. The logistic budget was high because of the need for forms, stamps to mark the status of the ballots, calculators, candles and battery lamps, hole punches and pencil sharpeners, as well as the different types of voter education material.

ANFREL noted a delay in ballot paper printing because of the disputes between the candidates and administration bodies (CNE and STAE). The candidates from FRETELIN party insisted on including the party symbols on the ballot paper. CNE had decided not to include any party's symbol on the ballot paper because it was a presidential election, not a parliamentary election, and STAE wanted to give equal treatment to all candidates, both from political parties or independent. So they said no candidates could include their party symbols on the ballot paper. The dispute continued until the candidates finally brought their case to the appeals court who allowed the appeal. The decision was final leaving other candidates feeling unsatisfied with the decision. The ballot papers were finally printed with 2 candidates using their party symbol and personal symbol, 4 candidates using the RDTL flag and two candidates who didn’t use any symbols at all.

Training for Polling Officers

STAE provided training for the polling workers which was conducted periodically starting from STAE district level and Brigada. The training for polling officers conducted by Brigada was based on polling centers which represent each village and are monitored by UNV (United Nation Volunteers) training support who were present in the districts. As part of this training Brigada also provided a polling simulation for the staff. ANFREL also observed and gave a briefing to some of the polling officers in training, eg. in Balibo and Bobonaro, generally talking about the importance of maintaining neutrality to build the country through free and fair elections.
Campaign Periods

The system has given significant support to all presidential candidates. Each candidate received 20,000 US dollars cash for the campaign expenses while the UNDP gave them goods/services in kind valued at 10,000 dollars each. There is no limit of the campaign finance mentioned. If a rich candidate wants to use their personal funds for the campaign, they can do so. The election will be funded by the government (US$ 10 million) and by UNDP (US$ 4 million).

The campaign period started on 23rd March and ended on 6th April 2007 with a 2 day cooling off period before the 9th April election. During this period we did not see many campaign materials for any candidate but there were advertisements in the newspapers and on the radio. The TV broadcast is just for half a day, every day. The following are some news stories that we collected from the media news in the different areas:
• Ermera (26/3/07): FRETELIN militants attacked a journalist and broke his hands, the journalist has been sent to Australia for treatment. FRETELIN also argued with the FSI because they refused to stop at a checkpoint operated by FSI, UNPOL and Local Police. The FSI had to break one of the militant’s car windows to check the vehicle. For that the Secretary General of Fretelin asked the FSI to apologize but the FSI General Mal Rerden refused.

• Liquica (27/3/07); the community threw stones at the Fretelin militants during the campaign of Lu-Olo. Fretelin accused Rai-los (Former civil commander who was armed by Fretelin and has now joined the CNRT party) of organising the incident.

• Lospalos (27/3/07); Fretelin supports attacked Ramos Horta supporters during Ramos Horta’s campaigning in Lospalos District and destroyed one car and injured one of Ramos Horta’s supporters from Fretelin Mudanca (Fretelin moderat) named Victor Mau Bocy.

• Baucau (27/3/07); An unidentified group stoned people during the campaign of Avelino Coelho (number 2) and yelled ‘Viva Fretelin’ (long live Fretelin)

• Viqueque (1/4/07); Fretelin supporters stoned PD supporters in the Democracy Field and did not allow Lasama to campaign in that area. The incident resulted in serious injury to 3 of PD’s supporters.

• Makadique – Viqueque (28/3/07); Fretelin supporters stoned Ramos Horta supporters during their rally injuring more than 20 people and UNPOL captured 3 Fretelin supporters that were involved in the incident.

• Baucau
Ramos Horta and Lu-Olo supporters were arguing. So far there has been no report of any injuries

• Campaigning in Dili
On Wednesday 4th April there were 5 candidates that campaigned in Dili: Xavier in Bidau, Lu-Olo in Delta 3, Fernando Lasama in Democracy Field, Joao Carascalao in GMT and Ramos Horta in the National Stadium.

There were conflicts between supporters from the 5 candidates that resulted in 17 people being injured and 9 motorcycles burnt. The incidents happened in:
1. Bidau sub district between Fretelin and ASDT
2. Ai-tarak Laran sub district between PD and Fretelin
3. Mascarenhas-Balide sub district between Fretelin and PD
4. Kaikoli sub district between CNRT and Fretelin
Public Debate: (5/4/07)
A public debate was held in the Delta Nova building – Comoro. Two of the candidates did not attend the debate and at the date of writing there was no clear reason as to why they were not there. The debate centered on the candidates plan and priorities if they were elected. Most of them prioritized the resolution of the IDPs, petitioners and Alfredo’s cases and national unity and establishments.

ANFREL observers also went to several campaign events in the districts and join the crowds to witness the progress of the campaigns. From eastern and western parts of the country we noted the following:

- Campaign Progress in Eastern Part
The eastern parts such as Baucau, Liqueur and Los Palos are well known as Fretelin strongholds and most of the party leaders came from these areas too.

In Baucau: On 02 April 2007 during the campaign of Fernando “Lasama” Araujo from the Democrat Party, near the IDP camp, three men tried to interrupt the campaign; the men were arrested by police. A few days before that, one of the candidates, Mr. Francisco Xavier Do Amaral from ASDT party, cancelled a campaign event scheduled to take place in the football stadium due to security concerns. There was a group of 25 people in black t-shirts and trousers walking inside the stadium before the campaign started and there was no confirmation from the organizer about the identity of that group. The candidate finally decided to cancel the event. In the afternoon an ANFREL observer received information from the police that the group mention above is a gangster and criminal group.

In Viqueque: ANFREL observed that Liqueur district was a very difficult area to campaign in for opposition candidates because Fretelin have a very strong base there. Ramos Horta, Fernando Lasama (Democrat Party) and Lucia Lobato faced difficulties in holding their campaign events there because some groups came to interrupt during the campaign. The ways in which they interrupted included drunk men shouting and making noise, stepping on or crushing plastic bottles containing drinking water to make a sound like a small bomb and throwing stones at the people who had gathered for the meeting. Fernando Lasama’s Convoy was blocked by an unknown car but the police were able to resolve the situation and after that the candidate could return to Baucau.

The observers noted two main incidents in Viqueque: on March, 29 during Ramos Horta’s campaign, the convoy was attacked by an unidentified group after following the campaign process. The convoy was on its way back and was passing through the Makatiki sub-district. The group threw stones at the convoy, 20 people were injured and one person was admitted to hospital for serious injuries. Three policemen were also injured.

The second incident happened when candidate number 8 from the PD party came to campaign. During the campaign a group of 50 young Fretelin members interrupted and threw stones at the people gathered there. Then a group of PD supporters also came out to fight with the Fretelin group. The local policemen stepped in to stop the violence between the two groups. The police pointed their guns at the people from the Fretelin group and asked them to stop creating problems. They also stopped the other group from retaliating. The situation was brought under control before anybody was injured or killed.
In Los Palos; on March 27th during a campaign event, Mr Victor Da Costa, the leader of Fretelin movement, was attacked by militant members of Fretelin. This happened because the militant group was angered by his participation in Ramos Horta’s campaign. The militant group also attacked another person, Luciano Conceicao.

- Campaign Process in Western Part
This area is well known as a stronghold of the opposition or anti-Fretelin groups and even though Fretelin is still quite strong in some areas. No major problem were observed in this area. ANFREL monitored three campaign events held by the candidates Lu-Olo, Joao Carascalao and the socialist candidate Avhelino.

!The 8 candidates’ campaign posters witnessed many government officers from the local level (Chief of village) to the Ministerial level get involved in the campaign process. It was not very clear how they were interpreting the regulation since they were still in a position of civil servants. NGOs and monitoring groups have complained about these matters and the unfairness and irregularities of the practice. They also strongly disagreed with the government policy of giving a motorcycle to village heads during this time, given that the police do not have enough motorcycles for their work and so where motorcycles became available they should be given to the police first.

An ANFREL observer found that a Minister of State Administration and the Secretary of Region IV joined the Fretelin Parade in the Bobonaro district; and they even used their home and vehicles to mobilize the participants. In the meantime ANFREL observed many heads of villages had mobilized to come in Maliana city to participate in the campaign and join the participants in the trucks and vehicles. ANFREL also noted the heads of the various villages (Sibuni from Bobonaro sub district, Lolotoe and Balibo) gathering with the crowds and acting as coordinators who force many villagers to join in the parade.

An observer noted that the assistance extended to the provision of a government vehicle. Motorcycles are commonly used by chiefs of the villages in the campaign process as we found in the Districts Bobonaro, Same, Suai, Los Palos and Baucau (in this district the head of the village always parked the motorcycle in front of the Fretelin party office). There was no reaction from CNE

22 Head of Region is Secretario Estado Regiaun IV, who managed the district of Bobonaro, Liquica and Suai. East Timor divided into four regions; western, eastern, Central, and Southern.

23 The motorcycle was distributed by the Ministry of State Administration in a rush before the election process, the motorcycle is still without plate registration numbers.

24 Based on Interview with a NGO in Baucau.
when ANFREL raised this issue\textsuperscript{25}. The ANFREL observer tried to interview some Sub district leaders in their respective offices and request a clarification. One of them was nervous when we visited and did not provide a proper answer. One of them just denied the involvement and insisted he had acted as a neutral and impartial public figure. Some of the other heads of sub districts could not say anything when we entered their office and found many campaign materials such as leaflets and stickers spread out on their office table. The same thing also happened in Los Palos and Baucau districts.

ANFREL tried to clarify the question of why the government was in such a rush to distribute the motorbikes that it did not even wait for the vehicle numbers to be registered. It was suggested that this may be considered a use of government resources to benefit the village chiefs who have a lot of power over the people and can influence their vote. But the government refused to speculate about these issues. Mr. Valentin Ximenes, the Deputy of Minister of State Administration, said: “[It] was scheduled and planned long time ago and this is the time to distribute [the motorbikes] it is not related with the election at all”.

\textbf{Intimidation and Campaign Provocation}

The Eastern team recorded intimidation from the ruling party during the campaign process. In Maliana some groups who support the ruling party candidate had come to meet with one lady who runs a small restaurant in the city and threatened to kill her by putting grenades in her mouth. It happened

\begin{quote}
\textsuperscript{25} According to Campaign regulation article 29 about use of state assets and property; “it is absolutely forbidden...[to] use...public goods, namely facilities, material, vehicles, financial and human resources, information and any other element belonging to the state, for purpose of campaign and electoral propaganda” \end{quote}
when the group was taking a break for lunch; the group doesn’t want the restaurant to serve and sell food to opposition candidates in the other campaigns. The victim was really scared and worried about her family’s safety and she planned to move all the family to Kupang-Indonesia side because her husband works there. And according to her, many peoples are concerned that if the Fretelin lose the election they will not be safe and be threatened again. However, people are also scared that if the Fretelin win the election they will be in danger too. The threatening behavior has not been reported to the authorities since they all know each other and the victim is scared of revenge from the gangster group.

The intimidation also happened in Liqueur. In this area the candidates from the opposition party cannot run their campaign and put up their posters because every time they set up the flag or any campaign materials in a public area or on private properties, somebody will destroy or remove the materials immediately and threats are made to scare the people.

During the process the candidates usually provided speakers. ANFREL found the candidates did not use this opportunity to inform the people of their program and ideas but mostly the speakers only provoked the crowd and gave them information that would increase their conflict and hatred for each other. Even though this violates the regulation, the candidates still liked to express their feeling in front of the public.

“Oposisi kaer kilat, fretelin kaer fatuk” in tetun, means “opposition raised a weapon, Fretelin raise the stone”, this provocative song was famous in the western part of the country as a propaganda song used by the ruling party to agitate the people.

Cooling Off Period
According to the election calendar STAE provided a two day cooling-off period in between the last campaign day and election day on April 7-8, but they actually took a three day cooling-off period since the 6th was Easter and in a Catholic country they have a holiday until election day and people really respect the traditions of the Easter celebrations. This helped make the situation calmer. No campaign activity was reported by ANFREL or KOMEG observers and no incidents were reported either.

In the meantime this is obviously different to what happened to STAE in the district office where they could not enjoy the holiday season as they had to work extremely hard to finalize the whole logistical preparation and distribution. They did the packing of all the non sensitive material and the ballot papers which had just arrived on March 7. Considering the security and the sensitivity of the goods the packing was done by STAE with assistance from UNV. In some districts UNV handed over all the duties, they separated the sensitive and non sensitive materials into different boxes and sealed them, after the BRIGADA checked the packing was complete. In some area the Brigada was not involved at all and just waited in the polling centre while the STAE in districts transferred all the material. It seems like there wasn’t a uniform procedure of packing and distribution.

26 Campaign regulation articles no 13 about forbidden use of oral or written language which is considered against the state, inciting violence, defamatory and discriminatory.
STAE in district office distributed the material out from the district level to polling centers a day before Election day. STAE in district Manufahi organized the ceremony to hand over logistics from STAE to the PNTL (Policia Nacional de Timor Leste) together with UN Police as the body in charge to secure the delivery process. They will transfer all the materials and security officers to every polling center. The ceremony was attended by the Secretario Estado Regiau III, representative from the Ministry of State Administration, UN Police district commanders, PNTL District Commanders and CNE, STAE, all Brigada from polling centers and other observers. At the end of the process the material was loaded into vehicles and transferred using trucks, vehicles and helicopters. The material, together with the Brigada, left for the polling centers escorted by PNTL and UN Police. In the meantime the hand-over process in the District Ainaro was attended by the Minister of State Administration. Unfortunately not all districts had a ceremony or a procedure of this kind.

The material reached the polling centers and was stored in a safe and locked room and secured by 2 (two) PNTL. Some polling staff also stayed on and slept due to the distance of their homes. ANFREL observers observed during the night time and visited some of the polling stations to interview a couple of PNTL security people who remained in the area until the polling centers closed the following evening. This means they would have been on duty for more than 36 hours in the polling centers.

Media
Most of the Media seemed to broadcast advertisements and news about the PM, Jose Ramos Horta and Francisco Lu-Olo Gutteres more than the other candidates. The TV broadcast for half a day. They cannot extend this time for election purposes because they do not have the technological capacity and also lack the human resources. Some media like Timor Post put several pages of particular candidates in each day (5 pages). Media also received training from IFES and from some international organization on the role of the media in an election.

Security and IDPs
Since the disturbances of 2006, the effectiveness of the PNTL (the national police force) in Dili has been limited but is still functional in the Districts. UNMIT was mandated, under Security Council resolution 1704, that executive policing and public order be assured by the UN Police contingent (UNPol), which is part of the UNMIT. Further security is provided by the International Stabilization Force (ISF), made up principally of Australian and New Zealand troops. In Dili the situation during the campaign period was unstable, people did not dare go out at night time and there was violence and intimidation in several areas. IDP camps needed security but people outside the camp also did not trust the IDPs.

There are about 20,000 IDPs in the whole country but the numbers keep changing because some of them move in and out of the camps. In Dili IDP camps spread everywhere in empty public areas such as: Church Compound, Comoro international airport, Metinaro, NGO office compound and many other small places. In Baucau district there are 4 IDP camps with more than 1,000 IDPs. ANFREL observers visited and interviewed the IDPs and generally they demanded the same thing i.e. security guarantee whenever they move back to their area of origin. They also want peace so that they may make a livelihood, live a better life and develop their futures, earn money and raise their families. They expect the process of the election will run peacefully and will support their hopes, as mentioned above.

ANFREL witnessed the IDP living conditions and considered them really poor. They live in crowded small tents, where it is very hot during the day. There was a lack of sanitation, water and food. More over the situation in the camps was not conducive to safety of women and children and many criminal offences, such as cases of rape, have been reported. None of the cases have been brought to the attention of the law because most of the victims were threatened and were too scared to officially report the offence to the police. The children play around the compound without proper clothes and many of them have not continued their formal education since fleeing to the camp. Father Immanuel of the Cathedral Church in Villa Verde Dili stated that “The social problems grow very fast and nobody can control it since the IDP[s are] free to move and do anything that they want, we hope the government or the international relief program have plans to [provide] shelter...[for] them [and help the IDP's get] back to their home Currently they [are] scared to go home for many reason: some of their property was taken by their neighbors or enemies, other people were burnt out and many of them [are] scared due the conflict which...still exists in their areas”.

International relief organizations and NGOs such as Caritas, CRS, World Vision, and also UNHCR conducted several programs to support and provide basic needs, sanitation and some of them provided entertainment to reduce the stress level of IDPs.
5. ELECTION DAY

STAE has been running the process according to the schedule (Appendix II). With one man one vote and one ballot paper for this election, voters seem to understand how to simply vote for one candidate. Voters can vote anywhere in Timor Leste. Most of the polling stations were placed in schools. Prisoners are allowed to vote inside prisons but there is no such practice at the IDP camps.

The process for the polling and counting day\(^\text{27}\) follows the procedures below:
1. Voting time is from 7.00 am till 4.00 pm, altogether 9 hours.
2. Eligible voters, over 17 years old, need to have documents to show before voting (either an old voter card without photo, or a new voter card with photo or passport). Those who registered for the new voter card will not be able to use an old card or passport. Old voter cards will be confiscated as soon as they receive the new card.
3. All the cards that voters use will be punched with one hole but such practice is not applied to the use of a passport.
4. Polling staff that have a duty to record the voters should record the voter’s name and card number when they come to vote because there is no voter list at the polling station.
5. Voters can vote either by using pen to mark the block at the right hand side of the ballot paper or use a nail to punch a hole (coblos), but cannot use both methods of voting.
6. The ballot paper is designed according to the approval of the parliament. The papers did not include each candidate’s number, but simply showed each candidate’s name (nick name), logo (flag), photo and then a space for the voter’s pen marking or coblos. Candidate no. 1 used the Frettilin flag for his logo, numbers 2, 3, 5, 6 used the national flag but number 7 and 8 have no logo.
7. After casting a vote, voters need to dip their right hand index finger in indelible ink brought from India.
8. Voters who are in the queue at 4.00 pm are allow to vote
9. Counting will be at the polling stations after 4.00 pm but if there is any disturbance after that for one hour, the counting will be transferred to the district counting centre.

The number of people registered to vote is 522,933 (51% are male, 49 % are female). There are more women than men in Timor Leste but less women registered than men. The STAE has arranged for 504 polling centers with 705 polling stations. Since the voters are allowed to vote anywhere, spare ballot papers were printed for each polling station, and 660,000 ballot papers were printed in total. The unused ballot papers will be crossed at the end. There are 3,600 staff for the 9\(^{th}\) April election with about 2000 national observers (more than 1000 are from KOMEG). Another two counting rounds will be done at the district level and national level. The official result will be announced on the 14\(^{th}\) April, 2007. After the result, the law provides for a period of 72 hours for complaints and protests to the courts.

\(^{27}\) The government announced an official public holiday for the election day
Opening
ANFREL observers arrived at the polling station around 06.30am and witnessed the amazing East Timorese who crowded and stood in long queues in front of the polling stations in every part of the country. This was also confirmed by ANFREL observers in central, eastern and western parts of the country. We admire the spirit of the people who came and voted for their candidates. We also saw the spirit of the polling officers who began working in the polling centers from the day before the election and set up the polling station throughout the day until early morning. There were some problems with preparation - polling staff were confused about how to start the process regarding technical matters; they had problems setting up the polling booths; opening the boxes; recognizing which stamp they should use in ballot papers, and using the ink. The same confusion was also reported from other observers in central, eastern, and western parts of East Timor, causing a delay in the voting process.

In addition some polling staff faced problems when opening the indelible ink bottle, the seal was too tight and they did not have proper equipment to open it. They tried to solve the problem by making holes in the top of the bottle and dripping a small amount of the ink liquid to a small cup. They did not

Note that in the boxes there are 6 stamps to mark the ballots, each stamp is used to identify the ballot regarding whether it is valid, invalid, etc know if the inside of the bottle had a sponge to absorb the liquid. After complaints and pressure from the Fiscals (the candidates’ agent in the polling stations) the Brigada eventually cut the top side of the bottle to open it.

Visiting a different polling station, ANFREL found the polling station was set up in different manner, with a different voting procedure; it seemed there was not a standard. Some polling stations placed the Fiscals in the corners, and some others placed them in the middle and another polling station just let them walk freely around in the middle of process. Some polling staff requested and recorded their ID cards but some polling stations did not. It was an interesting situation but generally everything was under control and the opening process continued peacefully.

Voting Process
Generally ANFREL observed that the voting process ran smoothly without any major incidents occurring. There were several technical problems during the implementation phases of the voting process which are listed below:

a. Queuing control: the voters arrived early to the polling stations and formed a long queue and some of them stood in the rain and cold weather after walking for hours. ANFREL did not see any initiative from the staff who were in charge of the queuing to organize the lines in order to speed up the process and allow the senior citizens, disabled people and sick people to vote first. The people queuing often got stuck in the entry door between the flow of voters going in and out of the single door, and at the same time people in the lines kept pushing to get closer to the door. This was witnessed in polling stations in Hora Quice, and Escolla Flecha in Aututo, both in Maubessy, district Ainaro; people hustled and pushed each other in the enter/exit door.

b. Registration of voters in polling station: In all polling stations visited by ANFREL observers in central, east and western districts, we found the staff of the polling station who were in charge of registration did not check the voters’ fingers for ink marks, to prevent double voting. In addition the polling officers did not check and compare the voters faces with the photos in their electoral card (for the new cards). Polling officers were kept busy taking records and punching holes in the electoral cards, while the voters in the queue lines were yelling to speed up the process.

The need to make a hole in the electoral cards was also a problem. While we found almost all polling staff were confused about the instructions as to which card to punch and which one not to punch, every polling station had a different practice. Some only punched the old electoral card because they said the punch tool did not work on hard plastic material; some of the polling stations only used a nail for the old electoral card; and some did not punch at all because they said the tools were broken (although in fact there was a pin which locks the puncher, which they should have pressed and opened/locked before using the puncher). ANFREL observers often had to help them to use the lock/open pin.

ANFREL observed many people who walked for many hours being rejected from casting a ballot, due to a misunderstanding over the card that they should bring to the polling station. Many voters only brought a national ID-card which does not qualify them to vote. They were very sad regarding the rejection and did not have time to go back home and collect the proper voter card. They did not know that they were required to use the electoral card for this election even though they had one. Some voters brought a copy of the voter card rather than the original which is not allowed, but the polling staff in Flechta School allowed them to vote anyway.

c. Ballot paper signatory/stamp; in this stage of the process the bulletin officer (the staff member who is in charge of giving out ballot papers) generally worked well, however ANFREL still found some officers forgot to put a stamp on the back page, and some forgot to provide a signature as well, where they should do both. This happened in almost all polling stations that we observed.

d. Balloting in booths; many voters seemed confused after they received a ballot paper about which polling booths they should go to, because there were no staff guide them. Some voters would gather in one polling booth, and others would talk to each other while they were placing ballots, with no complaints or direction from the staff. ANFREL observers found that secrecy in some polling stations was not good. In one polling station we found a person who was trying to see the casting process by standing in an area where he could see the process inside the booths.

ANFREL, some Fiscals and observers were surprised when they saw many voters emerge after casting their votes in the booths without the ballot papers in their hand. We later realized many voters put the voting papers in between the gap in the polling booths. They had assumed that was where they were supposed to put their papers. The polling booth was designed in such a manner that there was a gap between the bottom stand and the box placed over it. The polling staff had to help the voter take out the ballot paper from that gap and deposit it in the correct ballot box. This caused embarrassment to the elderly voters and also wasted a lot of time. This happened in almost all polling stations visited by ANFREL observers.

e. Inking processes; this part of the process seemed to have no problems, apart from a few cases in some polling stations where voters walked out without putting indelible ink on their finger. In these cases the staff were busy trying to push the papers into a full box. After an observer raised the alarm, some voters were brought back to get their inking. It was important to ensure all voters who had cast their ballots got marked with ink to prevent multiple voting.

Closing

Following the end of the voting process at 4.00 pm in accordance with the regulations the process closed, but an opportunity was given for the people who were still standing in the queue to vote. No special cases were recorded. Only a few polling stations closed early because they did not have any ballot papers left. As there was not enough time before voting closed to wait for a new supply, they decided to close.

Counting

According to the regulations, the counting was conducted in polling stations witnessed by candidates’ agents and observers. So it was possible to know the result faster based on results at the polling station, however the concern was that the way people in a particular area voted might create security problems and other technical issues. Based on observations in the field we recorded several problems as outlined below:

- The methods of counting: in accordance with the counting regulations, all ballot papers first have to be classified as valid, invalid or blank. Counting is done only in the second round after all ballot papers are so classified. This results in double the amount of work and considerably delays the counting process. There is a need to merge the two processes – counting of valid votes and separation of invalid votes and blank votes should be done at the same time.

We saw many polling stations using different counting methods, as they realized the counting would be faster if they did counting and classifying at the same time.

- Lack of accommodation: the polling stations who followed the counting methods according to the regulations needed more time to finish the process. Some remained until dark without lights and without proper electricity since there was no reliable electricity power in the country. STAE tried to overcome this issue by providing two battery lamps, and some Brigada worked hard to provide back-up light by borrowing and setting up the generator unit from the village authority, but there was not enough light for the process to be done in a clear and transparent manner. There was scope for cheating in the counting process by polling staff. People were not able to see the counting process clearly, leading to dissatisfaction amongst them. Such dissatisfaction has the potential to lead to violence. This can be prevented if counting is done in a counting centre which has better facilities.

- Security: A lot of tension was created once the results of the polling station started to become clear. The supporters of the losing candidates became agitated. In one polling station, the losing candidate’s supporters tried to destroy the votes, rubbed off the counting details and tried to destroy the polling station before security was called in. The incident that was recorded by ANFREL observers happened in Baucau city - District of Baucau, at SDK St. Domingos Savio polling centre, which was in a stronghold of the Fretilin party. There were two ballot boxes to be counted in the center. The first box revealed that Ramos Horta was leading. This angered some supporters and three young men started kicking the boxes and destroying things. The counting process had to be stopped and security people had to be called in. It was only after the security came and took away the three young men that the counting could begin again.

29 Based on observation in Madabeno, Sub district Laulara, District Aileu

In the polling centre at SDN I Baucau, polling station No. 2 at around 08.00 pm a man came and tried to attack the polling staff - he threw a big stone when he found out that Ramos Horta lead the count. Luckily there were young groups around to stop him, and they took him far away from the polling station. When the counting is done at the polling station itself, these kinds of incidents can happen very easily.

To prevent this issue from occurring in the future it is recommended that counting occur in one center as it is more convenient; it will prevent local conflicts and revenge by the party who loses; and will also prevent vote buying by parties who know the mapping of the voters. It will also be important for reducing the possibility of intimidation.

After finishing the counting process in the polling station, all the material was packed in boxes and transferred to the district office accompanied by PNTL and UN Police guard, for district counting. Following the recording and data entry into the IT software provided in the district counting center, the result was sent to the National level. CNE in the district office is the institution in charge of conducting the recording and data entry. They hold the security codes and passwords to operate the computer, and one of the CNE national commissioners assists the CNE in each of the districts.

Party/Candidates’ Agent
The presence of candidates’ agents was very important during the process of opening, voting, closing and counting in polling stations where, according to the regulations, they were the only parties allowed to raise a complaint and make comments during the process. The observers, both international and national, were not allowed to disturb, stop or make any complaint in the polling stations, otherwise they could be punished by various fines in US currency.

The candidates’ agents were present in almost all polling stations, where there were at least 4-6 agents for each polling station. Even though the role was very important we did not see many actions or protests taken during the process. Many agents seemed to have no idea what they should do or how to conduct monitoring in the polling stations, and most of them got bored over time while they were observing. They were more interested in knowing the final result. Interviews with candidates’ agents in various polling stations revealed almost the same story each time - they were recruited and only got training for a day to record the election result only. Some political parties did not provide any checklists for them.
6. THE ELECTION RESULT

The incumbent Prime Minister of RDTL Mr. Jose Ramos Horta and the ex-guerrilla Mr Francisco “Lu-Olo” Guterres achieved the two highest results and will continue the competition for the 2nd round of Presidential elections which will be held on May 8 2007. The CNE announced that Mr. Lu-Olo from ruling party Fretilin led the votes and Mr. Ramos Horta was in second place at the last counting result. Even though there were many protests and disputes regarding the irregularities of the counting process, and many complaints from the candidates, no-one can prove the suspected violations. To ensure the transparency of the counting result, the CNE are doing a re-count for the districts where irregularities are suspected by re-entering the counting certificates Before the final result is announced the CNE has provided 24 hours to candidates/political parties to lodge a direct complaint to the Tribunal as the highest decision maker for election result disputes.

The final result for the first round:

From the final count in Dili it showed that the eastern part of the country (Lautern, Baucau and Viqueque) has given a big contribution to Lu-Olo’s votes, with almost 65 percent of the total votes that he collected. Meanwhile Ramos Horta led in the districts of Dili, Liquica and Manatuto. Other candidates shared the votes in other areas. Lasama won in four areas - Bobonaro, Covalima, Ermera, and Oecussi. Even though he won in many districts, the total vote was not big due to the low population in those areas. Xavier do Amaral won in his local areas such as Aileu and Ainaro.

7. TRAINING AND CAPACITY BUILDING OF LOCAL NGOs

ANFREL’s missions in other Asian countries have centered on conducting election observation. However the East Timor mission was different in that, although monitoring the 2007 Presidential Election occurred, the main task in mission was to make a capacity building through the training and daily management assistances for the local NGO’s

30 The Full Counting Certificate is in the Appendix
31 According to the regulations where no candidate gets more than 50% of the votes the 2nd round election must be set up within 30 days after the 1st election.
During the pre mission stage, two national NGO’s were chosen as having appropriate capacity to promote democracy and a fair and free election process. These NGO’s were KOMEG (the local election monitoring group) and the Women Caucus in Politics. KOMEG was selected as a main organization because KOMEG was the first NGO coalition to form an Election Monitoring group in East Timor.

ANFREL has proposed that the objectives of the training program should be:

1. To strengthen civil society and support the local network that promotes genuine democracy in East Timor.
2. To encourage NGOs promoting women’s rights to work effectively in politics and to encourage voters to support the introduction of a women quota in parliament.
3. To build an international network for East Timor with a connection of ANFREL in South East Asia.
4. Create a peaceful atmosphere for polling and ensure a credible outcome.

ANFREL has recognized several weaknesses of the coalition which include a lack of co-ordination, failure to manage observations and inappropriate reporting through the media. Previously ANFREL has given assistance with training by visiting the KOMEG headquarters and discussing solutions for problems faced.

ANFREL has also been consulted by the CNE regarding the standard used in the election process, particularly concerning the any delays in agenda, disputes, protests by candidates about issuing of ballot papers, the counting procedure and other logistical distribution issues.

Training for Women Caucus in Timor Leste Politics

On the 20 and 21 of March 2007, the Women Caucus’s national training took place in the Joao Paulo II nursery compound in Comoro in the capital city Dili. Twenty-five participants attended the process with most of them from the district women caucus. Some were representatives of various female organized political parties such as Fretelin, Democrat Party (PD), and even the PSD (Social Democrat Party) sent a male representative. ANFREL did not refuse the male participants because of their keen interest in training particularly learning about the role of female participation in the election process. The male participants were extremely grateful to ANFREL for allowing them to participate in the training.

During the training, ANFREL modified the curriculum to meet the various needs of the participants, but continued to maintain a focus on the increasing knowledge of the election monitoring process. The ANFREL trainer opened the session introducing the curriculum, and then began to talk about general rights of women in politics. Discussion also focused on CEDAW (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women) and rights under the ICCPR (International Covenant in Civil and Political Right) and general issues surrounding democratic elections.

To keep the training interesting, ANFREL gave an entertaining session by showing a movie called “the Observers” regarding the observation process in Afganistan and showed more than 300 photos of the election observation in ten countries as collected by ANFREL for a Photo Study Curriculum. Both types of visual training gave a clear picture of what an observation is like in practice. The session then opened up discussion about why it is important to maintain neutrality and credibility as an observer. Since there was only one female candidate contested in the election, there was important discussion about supporting female candidates and encouraging women to become increasingly confident in politics. It was also pointed out that an election will be more democratic and more meaningful if we promote equality amongst the genders and ensure there is no discrimination based on age, religion or education.

In addition to creating a mindset of why democracy is promoted, the ANFREL trainers also presented a powerpoint presentation providing technical and practical points for observation and monitoring of the election process. This curriculum included roleplay and group discussions. The curriculum clearly explained the role and position of an observer and how to act professionally. It was also explained how to avoid a conflict of interest, how to start the proceedings and end the monitoring, as well as providing a report with recommendations to be sent to the electoral stakeholders.

CNE Commissioners attended the training and were willing participants in the session, including addressing a Code of Conduct for national observers. The training emphasised the importance of voter education for women at the grass-roots level. The training concluded with a confidential evaluation by each participant of the training process.

Role play and Group Discussion

To maintain motivation and ensure focus during training ANFREL used several role plays. Icebreakers and games were used when participants began to look sleepy and between the various speakers and to give the other participants an opportunity to get to know each other. The role plays also were used to teach participants interview techniques. Volunteers were asked to role play in front of the group acting out a different social group, such as farmers, fisherman, foreman, lecturers, village chiefs and the election stakeholders. ANFREL provided a list of example questions (translated into Bahasa34) catering for the different social status, education, and temperament of each social group.

ANFREL also encouraged group discussion to build confidence and two way interactions amongst the participants. This was done by asking the participants to divide themselves into three groups to answer questions about election violations on polling day and discussing, what they should do if they found irregularities during the observation time in polling station. The different groups separated and discussed for an hour the following four potential irregularities:
1. What would you if people make (or attempt to make) multiple votes?
2. What would you if a group of people or candidate agents make threats inside the polling station?
3. What would you register people to vote without an identity card?
4. What would you do if the polling station is hit by a bomb or damaged by a fire?
5. What would you do if the polling officer refuses to let you witness the counting process?

34 Example of questioner was given in training session and translated to be in Indonesian and Tetun languages
At the end of the discussions, one representative from each group presented their conclusions in front of the other participants. Their conclusions are recorded below:

Within the above lists of answers, we observed the interaction and the ability of the participant to absorb these points, whether they have understood what they are supposed to do, what they should do if they face real life problems and whether they understood that election monitoring can be implemented in the real work field.

Training Evaluation

At the end of the 2 days of training and after covering much curriculum, ANFREL invited the participants to make a personal evaluation for the training process. A piece of paper was distributed which requested the participant to write down anything thoughts they had about the training. We welcomed any criticisms or suggestions and ensured their comments were kept confidential to ensure they could fully express their opinions. From the participants’ feedback we collected many important inputs that we have summarized in table below;

| 1. Very informative both to election observers and to the public
  - Provided new information to local observers
  - Better understanding of the role of observers, the code of conduct and electoral managements
  - Training leads the participants to make deep insights concerning election observation
  2. The method of training was satisfactory, with particular mention to the:
  - Friendly approach
  - Brainstorming
  - Role playing and simulation games
  3. Expressed gratitude to André for his training | 1. Invite more observers
  2. Longer sessions and further details
  3. André’s continuous trainings to increase local observers’ knowledge, especially on the election time. |

Training for KOMEG

Training for this organization was completely focused on election matters, from the understanding of democracy through free and fair election, monitoring mechanisms, the standard United Nations monitoring system, monitoring methodology and COC international observation. Role plays and polling simulations were used to increase participants’ skills by creating a condition and violation related polling process.

The training was established by the joint contributing trainers; ANFREL and KOMEG Secretariat and was funded by ANFREL. The trainers planned to maximize the sessions by dividing the training into two categories; TOT (training for Trainers) and TFO (Training for Observer). The first training session was purposely set up for the KOMEG district coordinator who has the role of managing and setting up further training for field observers in their district. The other training session was conducted in the districts to equip the ANFREL observers to provide further training sessions. To make this possible ANFREL divided the trainers into three teams to ensure appropriate coverage of training. The teams were:

1. Central Team - central coordinators covering the areas Dili City, Liquica, Aileu, Ermera and Manatuto
2. Eastern Team - covering the areas Baucau, Viqueque and Los Palos
3. Western Team – covering the areas Bobonaro, Covalima, Ainaro and Manufahi

While implementing both training sessions, ANFREL observers were amazed at the diversity and the enthusiasm of all participants, who were representative of many social classes in the country i.e. students, NGO activists, teachers/lecturers, farmers, religious actors etc. ANFREL also observed the incredible support from the church communities assisting in developing democracy in the country.

A. Training For Trainers for KOMEG National Level

Training was held in the capital city of Dili on 15-17 March 2007. ANFREL organized training on the 2nd and 3rd days (out of a three day training schedule) without any interruptions or interference from other side. KOMEG organized training on the first day discussing internal agenda. The training for KOMEG trainers was also attended by the National Secretariat, four catholic priests, two nuns and 36 District coordinators. These coordinators represented 13 districts and each gender was equally represented.

35 The profile of the KOMEG attached in Appendix
The ANFREL trainer used two languages (English and Indonesian). Most of the participants could understand Indonesian, therefore it was more advantageous to obtain Indonesian speaking trainers so that maximum attention could be ensured during training. This was not easy as many of the laws and regulations were in Portuguese and few people could understand this language so the translation process took a lot of energy and concentration.

ANFREL presented a PowerPoint slide and taught curriculum about the basic principles of democracy, basic election monitoring principles and monitoring mechanisms. There was also a photographic study of ANFREL experiences over nine elections in different countries. ANFREL also conducted role plays on how to conduct interviews with the key actors and voters. Other role plays simulated the polling process including the violation scenario to test the sensitivity of the observers.

In opening training session ANFREL addressed democracy issues. ANFREL requested each participant to write what his/her opinion about “democracy” to assess each participants level of understanding. ANFREL invited the participants to express their opinions on paper and the great variety of opinions were collected and recorded on the board for participants to look at during free time. The opinions recorded are summarized in point form below:

people leader through a free and fair election. As a result of a democratic election people will want a multi-party system. Diverging answers showed opinion from a variety of backgrounds. This exercise assisted the trainers in defining their teaching strategy including the level of language that should be used to permit better absorption by the participants.

B. Training for Observer in District Baucau
The training was managed by KOMEG district coordinators and was attended by more than 97 KOMEG observers. Obviously this session was different from the previous Training of Trainers (TOT) session as this training aimed to prepare KOMEG field observers to be ready to perform observation on polling day. So the organizers modified the curriculum shortened training to one day only and focus on how to fill in the checklist and report, general election regulation, code of conduct of the national observers and lastly polling simulation. ANFREL trainer was invited shared election observation experiences and showed more than 300 photos on PowerPoint and encouraged interaction through discussion.

C. Training for Observer in District Los Palo's
The training conducted on 4th April 2007 took place in a church compound and was attended by 95 KOMEG observer participants from several villages. The process was managed by the KOMEG District coordinator with support from three KOMEG national trainers who assist the training for observer in all districts.

ANFREL trainer for Eastern districts was invited to attend and share experiences. However, due to time constraint of only one day and breadth of agenda ANFREL only showing the photographic study from observation experiences in PowerPoint and ended with discussion. In this training KOMEG also conducted polling simulation at the end of agenda.
Training was conducted by the KOMEG district coordinator who had already attended training taught by the KOMEG National and ANFREL through Training for trainers (TFT) on 3rd April 2007. This one day training session was dedicated for KOMEG field observers who came from six subdistricts and 54 Sucoes (villages). In total 104 total participants attended with almost equal gender ratios. The participant also role played as polling station observers to cover 68 polling stations in the district. The training was also assisted and monitored by the KOMEG National coordinator who sent three trainers to strengthen the process. This was considered the only chance to transfer all the observation knowledge for the polling observers. This training session was considered the only chance to transfer all of the previous observer’s knowledge to the current polling observers. ANFREL witnessed the incredible enthusiasm showed by KOMEG members (including 4 priests and two young priests) who came one day before training commenced from a remote villages without any accommodation.

The training began with introducing the participants to each other and continuing with the curriculum below:

The collaboration of STAE and CNE districts needs to be highlighted as they provided the LCD Projector which was really helpful in presenting the training slides and ANFREL photographic study.
A simulation of polling process;

ANFREL initiated a simulation of the polling process in order to assist observers with what to expect during the polling processing. The trainers asked the students if they could see any electoral violations or cheating inside polling station during the simulation.

After the simulation exercise all the observers understood the polling process much better. They were very grateful to have been taught how to recognize potential violations such as cheating and misconduct, as taught from the experiences in other countries.

E. Training For Observer in District COVALIMA

The training was for one and half days at the Salele Church on 3rd to the 4th – of April 2007. Father Immanuel designed the training not only for technical election observations but also to include a civic education agenda/curriculum.

On the first night a numbers of speaker from various church communities including Father Nata (from Parish Church), Father Yanto (from Zumalai Church), and Father Immanuel (from Sallele Church) were purposely invited to present the interesting topics below:

a. Role of the younger church communities to develop the democracy in East Timor.

b. How to be intelligent voters making a decision on the quality and merits of the various candidates.

c. Basic principles of human rights.
The session ended close to midnight after the organizers pleaded with the participants to get some rest! The next morning, after the participant had rested and eaten breakfast, the training continued for the next session. The ANFREL trainer joined the class in the afternoon due to difficult road conditions and made a presentation about the observation methodology and the polling process simulation with similar scenarios as in the training sessions in the Bobonaro district.

F. Training for Youth Communities in Parish Church of Suai

During the training day in Salele (inside the church) many catholic priests attended. One particular priest from the Parish Church in the Covalima District expressed an interest in a progressive ideology and invited the ANFREL trainers to give a session the next day dedicated for the youth group who were gathering in the church to prepare for the Easter ceremony. This impromptu session was specifically set up as an informal discussion to share experiences and state the importance of youth participation in the election process.

The training seminar took place on time in the semi permanent church building church. I was surprised when I saw approximately 200 participants from the crowd, including not only the youth, but housewives and even those youths who were ineligible to vote but still attended the seminar. The seminars must have been difficult for these participants to understand because of the complex content and discussions.

After personal introductions and outlining the objective of ANFREL organization, the discussions began with simple topics such as; what is democracy? Other discussions included principles of universal human right in the election process and gender equality in election, and finally how to be a smart and intelligence voter selecting and voting for good candidates. After one and a half hours of speaking there were an astounding amount of questions from participants which mostly related to election implementation and irregularities during the campaign process. There was some criticism of the STAE and CNE regarding the layout of the ballot papers in which some candidates had a symbol, some had the national flag and some of candidates had no symbols. Full information needed to make an intelligent vote could only obtained from posters which were distributed and stuck on the corner of walls in strategic places.

G. FIELD OBSERVATION TRAINING FOR KOMEG OBSERVERS - by direct field observation practice

After following two training sessions conducted by ANFREL, ANFREL together with KOMEG realized the difficult part of observation implementation is how to begin the observation in the real life bearing in mind East Timor culture. Theories is one matter, but the challenges in reality are obviously different. So as a follow up to training, the ANFREL observer invited the district coordinator and some KOMEG members in the district to join in direct field monitoring. The expectation was that these members could learn things such as: how to conduct an interview for election stakeholders, how to conduct minor fact finding, and most importantly what to observe in an election process i.e. campaign and logistic distribution and preparation of polling center. As predicted most of the participants had no idea how to start and what to observe in process, so after from the training from ANFREL, the participants felt more confident to continue the observation process by themselves.

This following examples were taken from the practice in the field.

In District Bobonaro

In the Bobonaro district, ANFREL invited three KOMEG observers to visit an extreme community called CPDRDTL. The community was unique because since the independence of East Timor, they have never followed the election process even since Indonesian authority. The community is quite big across East Timor with many followers. So it will be interesting to bring KOMEG observers to this community to conduct an interview with the leader of this group in Bobonaro.

After two hours walking through jungles and across hills the KOMEG observers were very worried that this community was fanatic and radical and for security reasons only male observers continued. When I arrived in this village, the atmosphere wasn’t good as many of the young villagers started to surround us with unwelcoming faces. We almost ran away, but after a good start, some helpful tricks and showing genuine friendship, these initially hostile youth members were friendly and brought us to their leaders. Since that time everything became under control and the interviews were very successful. The KOMEG observer was excited to enter the community is not as difficult as previously thought.

In the Manufahi District

In this district we (ANFREL and KOMEG from the Manufahi district) observed many things and invited more observers to become involved in the process. This time the atmosphere was not as good as there was an obvious disharmony between the local district coordinator and other international observers due the communication gaps. The KOMEG district coordinator was unhappy and not comfortable with dealing with the United Nations international staff who were working with almost all the election stakeholders such as STAE, CNE. The interpreters for the foreign election staff were not helpful because as they had all grown up together in the same district they seemed not to translate all information, to try to keep some matters confidential. After ANFREL suggested how people could interact and the importance to maintain open communication regardless of language problems finally some progress was made and the local observers started to interact better with the foreigners. The observation process started going well because everyone began to adjust with the difficult conditions and situations.

The other focus of the training was to observe and show how to conduct observation in the logistic preparation process. We observed in the logistic storage complex the international staff were busy packing and preparing for the next day’s distribution. This was a confusing process and instructions were needed to record the seal numbers and the addresses of the boxes so appropriate follow up could occur on the distribution.

KOMEG observing the packing process of the sensitive and non sensitive logistic, a day before distribution day.

KOMEG, Observers, observing the transportation of material by helicopter.

At night time, ANFREL & KOMEG Observer made an evaluation and concluded the events of the day with a comprehensive review of the two day observations in this district.

Training Materials
1. The material needs to be modified and adopted with specific conditions for each country's election.
2. The materials should be distributed at the beginning of training, not at the end.
3. Translations are also needed i.e. English into Indonesian language.
4. The text displayed on presentation should be bigger.
During the presenting in East Timor and observing the process, ANFREL was issued 2 statements\(^{39}\), the 1\(^{st}\) statement was released to media during pre-election period. The statement aimed to call for the election commission to take care about the voting condition for Internal Displaced Persons (IDP’s) who were lack of security. There was high possibility of violence when IDP people went to vote at polling station outside due the racial conflict. For these issued, the Mobile Ballot Boxes or escort security unit should be provided for them to go to the nearest polling station around the IDP’s camps.

ANFREL also initiate a joint press conference with KOMEG to publish preliminary findings which compiled from both observation in sub-regions and its findings. Originally this idea was came up after the team decided to help KOMEG to have one big press conferences with full equipment, material, schedule at the election commission (CNE) office. ANFREL put an initiative to talk and share many experiences with the KOMEG and media at CNE Media center. The local and international correspondences took note from the visual presentation about electoral violation, irregularities, misconduct, technical problem, etc through LCD power point and answered the questions.

APPENDIX-I  ANFREL 1st and 2nd Press Release of Presidential Election 2007

Open Letter to CNE and STAE

Timor Leste

26th March 2007,

ANFREL Call for Public Consideration on the Voting Condition for Internal Displaced Persons (IDP)

The Asian Network for Free Elections (ANFREL) praises the high number of East Timorese people who turned out to register for their new voter cards prior to Presidential Election, to be held on April 9th, 2007. The Technical Secretariat for Electoral Administration (STAE) and the Election Commission (CNE) had agreed to bring the new voter cards (with photo) to replace the old voter cards and allow people to vote anywhere in Timor Leste. Voters, who still want to use their old cards (no photo to identify), may be observed, and monitored in order to prevent the impersonation and multiple votes. It is also expected that the counting process will be either finished at the polling station or at the district counting centre; and will NOT do half way (one hour) at the polling station and continue counting at the district centre later.

ANFREL praises the candidates, political parties and the people of East Timor for their commitment to the principle of peaceful contest and fair play, in making the upcoming Presidential Elections violence-free. All stakeholders related to electoral administration are expected to adhere to the law and regulation and suppose to work in a completely non-partisan manner.

With full assistance to the voters for the high voter turn out in the coming Presidential Election and the next Parliamentary Election, the CNE, STAE and the related security units and UNPol must also put their high efforts to consider how to help those 20,000 internally displaced persons or IDPs at all camps, to come to vote safely by any mean.

ANFREL has humbly shared its concerns to the respected offices of CNE and STAE for consideration, whether or not the IDPs can be provided with mobile ballot boxes to all IDP camps for those who have old cards or new cards to cast their votes? Another possible assistance for IDP to cast their ballot paper is by allowing them to go to the near-by polling stations with the escort of security units. All old cards of the IDP (if no new cards with photos) will be treated the same way to other voter cards by punching a hold at the polling station before voting. Dipping indelible ink on the index finger of the right hand is necessary to be applied to IDP too.

Coalition for Election Monitoring and Observation (KOMEG) and the Asian Network for Free Elections (ANFREL), congratulate the people and the government of Timor-Leste for the peaceful Presidential Election held on the 9th April 2007. Both local and Asian observers appreciate East Timorese for their positive will for democracy and good cooperation to all the 15 Election Commissioners from CNE and the management team from STAE. The observers also noted the remarkable high voter turn out. It is impressive to see women participation in all electoral process as well as the strength of female candidate. Many women showed their strong will by walking from long distant carried the babies to take a long queue to vote.

KOMEG/ANFREL admire the hard work, of the poll officers at all polling stations who worked from the evening before the polling day, till the night of the Elections Day, the members of KOMEG, human rights NGOs, women organizations and all the other international observer groups.

KOMEG/ANFREL would like to also commend the effective work undertaken by UN-MIT and UNPol, who worked rapidly to solve all potential violence that could take place during the campaign and counting period.

KOMEG/ANFREL still would like to see some more development regarding the democratic future, holding of free and fair elections for the coming Parliamentary election. It takes the opportunity to point out some aspects for further consideration and discussion in Timor-Leste and among the other Asian democratic countries.

Election Administration
1. It would be important to have a fully independent management body (STAE) and its accountability under the CNE without any involvement of Ministry of State Administration. This is to avoid the influence of politicians and government officers from the ministry. The budget can be allocated to STAE through independent body.
2. CNE should be able to make a decision for electoral system, electoral process and the decision to design the ballot paper and other electoral tool /facilities, without the consideration of the parliament or politicians.
3. During the election time, those who are working with all respected Ministries and electoral bodies need to be neutral and impartial in their duties and conduct.
4. The work regarding on accreditation cards for media, candidate agents, local observers and an international observers should be more effective.
5. The STAE should not keep changing the detail of polling process, for instance, the instruction of STAE to punch a hold at the old voter card only. Soon after that the STAE had given another instruction to punch the hold on both old and new cards. Keep changing instruction could create confusion among the poll officers.

Voter Registration
1. In order to ensure the right of the voters, STAE should pay more attention and increase its efforts to assist people in rural and conflict areas and the IDPs to register themselves in the electoral rolls.
2. Increased awareness for voter registration and its processes is needed, it was evident that the ongoing efforts had not produced the desired results as some voters did not know how and where to register and some of them even came to the polling stations with UN registration cards which could not be used for this election. Some people even came with a copy of their old registration card.
Voter Education
1. Considering the high number of illiterates in Timor-Leste and the mistakes done at the polling stations on the 9th April, we encourage STAE in all districts to provide adequate education programs to people.
2. It was found that voters do not understand the pictures that were shown on the posters, stickers etc. Face to face education can be a better strategy for the next elections to reach them in an effective manner for voter education.

Campaign Process
1. To create a fair competitive environment for all candidates, it is important to enforce the law and to punish those government officials who take government’s facilities, vehicle and staff to support the campaign of some specific candidates or parties.
2. Political parties should follow the campaign schedule set by the STAE and should not arbitrarily change the date and the place which could result in confrontation with another party. Changing the campaign schedule and place could lead to clash as it was in the Presidential election.
3. For the fairness of all candidates, STAE and CNE must consider setting a ceiling of campaign expenditure, to limit the rich candidate/party towards over spending, when some of the financially poor candidates do not have the same chance. Observers noted the positive provision in Timor-Leste, where the government has already provided 20,000 dollars in cash for each candidate for their campaign and the UNDP gave each about 10,000 dollars in kind for campaign material.
4. The candidates should not engage in “black campaign” strategy to gain their popularity and should not attack other candidates with false rumors.
5. Educating people can be done by emphasizing on their social, political, and economic policies, so people can consider choosing the good leader from the candidates by exercising their right judgment and vote.
6. Since political campaign is always risked with conflict and violence, candidates and party agents should not take children for political activities, even though they may like to voluntarily join the campaigns or they were hired with low pay. Timor-Leste has acceded (16 April 2003) to the Child Rights Convention and thus all political parties have obligations to protect the rights of the child.

Intimidation
1. KOMEG/ANFREL calls on all stakeholders and those who decline their rights to vote, to respect the rights of voters and vulnerable people. The supporters, canvassers, members and party agents should not assist the candidates with unethical means i.e. intimidation, harassment, setting a condition, discrimination, revenge etc.
2. All candidates should perform their potential leadership with passion and ability to unite the country; they should not win the election while creating more conflict and hate.

Polling Process
1. Poll officers need more civic education for effective working process. This is in order to implement the electoral work and activities in the same manner at all polling stations.
2. The electoral process on the 9th April had been conducted slowly. There is a need to increase the poll officers to six persons in each polling station and increase the ballot boxes for some areas which have large constituency population to cater too, this will decrease the time for voters to wait for their turn to vote and will also facilitate in decreasing the long queue’s taking place.
3. To prevent multiple votes or double votes, STAE should view the list of voters from the code of voter card that officer note down in the book, before allowing the voter to take the ballot paper. This is to check if there are any code numbers double or multiple in the signed list. Those who use passport to vote can also use old voter or new voter cards to vote.
4. Voter’s index fingers needs to be examined to also check for any person who is trying to indulge in bogus voting. It was noted that most polling stations did not check the voter’s index finger, whether it was already inked. Multiple/double voters should be punished or fined when detected.

Counting Process
1. There should have only one pattern for the counting process in all polling stations.
2. To save the time of counting, it is not necessary to classify the valid and invalid ballot papers before counting the number.
3. Counting can be done directly and singled out invalid ballot paper can be part of the process; there is no need for duplication of efforts resulting in double work.
4. Counting should not be done in the dark room, but in a well lit area, where people, media, and other interested parties can observe the process taking place in complete transparent manner following all the due process.
5. For the security reason, a counting process at counting center still is recommended for all elections.

Media

1. During the electoral period, local TV and radio programs should be free from any influence of any specific power.
2. The local and foreign media should provide the public with impartial, fair and equal information of all candidates and not focus on some famous candidates only.
